

Communication Path

A Communication path is a type of association between nodes in a deployment diagram that shows how the nodes exchange messages and signals.

When you specify communication paths, you can define the number of nodes that can be connected at each end. You can also use labels to identify the type of protocol or network that is used in the communication.